Real Intelligence, Real-World Perspectives

AOGR's Readers: America's Oil & Gas Producers and Operators!

We exist in a world of perception, where reality is defined by what our senses perceive to be true. In the modern age of sensors, processors, streaming data, and automation embedded in even the most innocuous of devices, human perception and situational awareness are heavily augmented by seemingly endless waves of incoming information. Whether the goal is to predict today's weather or tomorrow's energy market trends and opportunities, energy industry decision-makers have never had so many data points to decipher and leverage for better results.

In the interconnected upstream and midstream sectors, ongoing field experiences, intuition and gut instinct still rule. Yet as often as not, business success these days is determined by honing skills and transforming incoming information into actionable intelligence. That's where The American Oil & Gas Reporter comes in.

For more than 65 years, oil and gas producers and operators have relied on AOGR to deliver real intelligence on the issues that matter most. From legislative/regulatory and capital market developments to the latest technological and scientific innovations pertaining to exploration, drilling, completions and production, it is the industry's information focal point.

AOGR's writers and editors deliver insights from real-world perspectives, drawing on the eyes and ears of C-suite executives as well as geoscientists, engineers, and boots-on-the-ground field managers. In every issue, AOGR delivers business and technical content relevant all along the decision-making chain, providing specialized market intelligence to help guide processes and boost bottom-line performance.

The 2025 Schedule of Issues represents a guidepost for your company's editorial and advertising decision-making process to help achieve targeted objectives throughout the calendar year. It lays out a blueprint to build a direct link to America's producers and operators, who stay tightly connected with AOGR day in and day out as their trusted resource for news and insights.

As always, readers are keeping the wheels of U.S. energy ingenuity spinning, stocking domestic consumers with ample supplies while enabling record-breaking exports of crude oil and liquefied natural gas. Get the gears of your business growth turning by tapping into the unique communications that only AOGR provides.
